UNUSUAL WEATHER BRINGS THUNDER, LIGHTNING, RAIN

Apparently a favored spot in this section of California, Washington township escaped the serious centers of the electrical storm that caused damage in surrounding sections Monday night.

Borne on a brisk south wind, the disturbance lashed in from the south at about 9 o'clock Monday night, heralded by brilliant lightning displays and rolls of thunder. Lightning struck in the hill sections several times during the storm, observers said. Hill fires were prevented by the accompanying rain, however.

The storm continued throughout the night, with tremendous bursts of thunder. Twenty hundredths inches of rain fell during the freak disturbance, which threatened again Tuesday night. No damage to crops was reported.

WPA FUNDS GRANTED FOR CENTERVILLE HIGH PROJECT

Coming as a pleasant surprise to Washington Union High school officials this week was the announcement that their request for $12,000 to help defray costs of earthquake repairs had been granted by the WPA. The request had been refused by the PWA not more than two weeks ago.

With the balance of the $26,000 needed already on hand, the repair work will get under way at the earliest time possible, according to Principal A. J. Rathbone.

According to reports heard Monday, the Warm Springs grammar school project, another at Pleasanton and one at Livermore, had also been approved.

The funds will be used at the Centerville school to strengthen the buildings against possible damage by earthquakes.

W. O. DAVIES, FORMER LOCAL TEACHER, SENTENCED

His plea for probation denied, William O. Davies, former school superintendent at San Leandro, and once a teacher at the Irvington Grammar school, was sentenced by Superior Judge Fred V. Wood early this week, to serve one to ten years in San Quintin prison. Davies had pleaded guilty to the charge of grand theft.

The probation plea was denied on grounds that the case involved the theft of public funds. Davies' request that he be allowed to remain in the county jail until today, to arrange his personal affairs, was granted.

Davies, who had been superintendent of schools at San Leandro for sixteen years, was arrested on the grand theft count recently when an audit showed a shortage of $7625.75 in funds of the Farrelly swimming pool.

Honest Itinerant Finds Purse; Notifies Police

Diogenes might have concluded his famous search for an honest man, had he been in Constable Tom Silva's office late last week, when Antonio Tonso, itinerant, brought in a purse he had found on the highway between Niles and Mission San Jose. The purse, along with personal papers and knick-nacks, contained several dollars in cash. It bore the name of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Hunt.

County Taxes Upped $455,494; Ten Per Cent Over 1934-1935

Spending to Increase With the Return of Old Utility Sources

Taxpayers in Alameda county will reach into the depths of their depleted pockets for $455,484 more this year than they did last, according to figures released this week by the California Taxpayers' Association. The county government, true to the predictions of the Township Register in an exclusive county story several weeks ago, has increased the 1935-1936 taxes that amount over the 1934-1935 levy. The increase is one of 10.6 per cent.

County officials, to the confusion of the average taxpayer, suavely point out that the county rate has been decreased 3 cents this year, and will be $1.10 instead of the $1.13 of 1934-1935. At the same time the county expenditures will increase to a tune of $455,494.

Just how is this startling effect attained? The answer is simple, very simple. By the re-

BATTERY CHARGE NETS 3 MONTHS JAIL SENTENCE

John B. Ruperto, of Decoto, is serving a three months sentence in the county jail, following his conviction on a battery charge brought by Mary Ruperto, his wife. He was sentenced last Friday by Judge J. A. Silva.

Testimony at the trial indicated that Ruperto, who was employed at Sacramento, had failed to give financial support to his wife and children for four months. He came to Decoto on her plea, but failed to give the woman sufficient money to carry on the home. In an argument that followed, Ruperto struck his wife several times.

Men's Club to Meet Here on October 30

Plans for the annual fall meeting of the Washington Township Men's Club are under way, according to President E. Dixon Bristow, of Niles, with Wednesday, October 30, as the date. The affair will be held at the Niles Congregational church parlors, the dinner to be served by the members of the Ladies' Guild, under the direction of Mrs. E. A. Ellsworth.

Business at the meeting will consist mainly of the election of officers, after which the group will hear a talk on early California history by Dr. William Paden, superintendent of Alameda city schools. Paden, who has spent many years gathering historic lore, is rated as one of the leading authorities on the state's past. An outstanding musical program is being prepared, in part by Miss Margaret Breier, Niles Grammar school music instructor and an accomplished violinist.

Bristow states that the meet will be in the nature of a "rejuvenation" gathering, to revive the interest of members who have dropped from the active rolls.

The present officers of the men's organization are: E. Dixon Bristow, president; H. F. Harrold, vice president; Barton Webb, secretary, and John E. Dutra, treasurer.

TRAINING COURSE FOR PARENTS IS ESTABLISHED

The first meeting of the new night school class in child growth and development was held at the Centerville high school Tuesday evening, following an organization meeting last Friday sponsored by the Niles Parent-Teachers' Association. Eighteen have signed for the course.

Mrs. C. N. Myrick, president of the Niles group, and parental education chairman for the Phoebe Hearst council, was a leader in the effort to establish the class here. A number of local mothers had been attending similar classes at Hayward. The instructor will be Mrs. William Cox, of Alameda, who has conducted similar classes in other parts of the bay region.

The discussions, certain to prove of great value to parents, will center around practical problems met in the supervision of children. The instructor points out that the class is not for the purpose of telling mothers how to raise their children," but to present a study of underlying principals, to be applied in individual cases. Practical problems will be presented.

The class meets each Tuesday night, from 7 to 9 p. m.

J. E. Rogers Recovering From Serious Illness

J. E. Rogers, Mission San Jose postmaster, has returned to his home following a serious illness at a San Jose hospital. During his convalescence the office is being run by Doc. Nichols, Rogers' assistant.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Martenstein attended the football games at the Berkeley Memorial stadium Saturday.

ROCK HURLER TO BE ARRAIGNED HERE TOMORROW

Benny Martinz, being held in the county jail, will appear for arraignment before Judge J. A. Silva tomorow on a charge of malicious mischief, brought by Newark Lax, of Newark.

Martinz was arrested by Arthur Roderick Saturday evening after he had allegedly broken the windshield of the Newark man's car with a rock. He is said to have thrown rocks at a number of other machines. He was turned over to deputy sheriffs.

GOVERNOR LAUDS LOCAL PRESS AS VALUABLE ASSET

VALUES CLOSE to home are sometimes overlooked. Such is often the case with the weekly newspaper, serving a particular community with all the vigor and wisdom at its command. Governor Francis, of Missouri, recognizing the value of the local press, has this to say:

"Each year the local newspaper gives away from $500 to $1000 in free lines to the community in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The editor, in proportion to his means, does more for his own town than any other ten men, and in all fairness he ought to be supported, not because you like or admire his writings, but because the local paper is the best investment a community can make. Today the editors of the local newspapers do the most for the least money of any people on earth."

Our Old Friend Spreads His Wings and Soars

From the Alameda Times-Star, a very fine paper, we learn that Friend W. Richardson, state bank examiner, has quit the state capitol building. He has moved his ponderous self, together with his office furniture, down into a fitting neighborhood, among the banks—the financial center of Sacramento!

The new location is in a L-A-R-G-E room, we learn, and is air cooled; and about Richardson in the mart of gold is a heavy and congenial staff of assistants (sotto voce: relatives and friends). Where his office had been previously located, the limitations of its four walls cramped the bank examiner's style. Besides it had a hot western exposure, and only one unfortunate employee.

Taxpayers will be delighted to hear that Grandma Richardson is spreading out. People have wondered why new sources of taxation revenue was the main and only activity of the last legislature. Now they know. And it is worth a new, air cooled office to clear up a mystery like that.

Is Mars Holding Out on Us?

People everywhere—the world over—strange as it may seem, are growing impatient for the Italian dictator to start the fuss in Abyssinia, secretly hoping that it will spread like a Nebraska prairie fire.

It is a queer twist in the nature of Christian peoples, but war is very popular in the making, and in its initial stages.

Should Italy and England and the Ethiopian king find a way to compose their difficulties without a resort to arms, millions—yes, hundreds of millions—of supposedly civilized human beings would be dreadfully disappointed.

A Million a Minute

It is said that a sucker is born every minute. Max Baer thinks that is an underestimate. He says there are a million. And Max ought to know.

District's Dogs Fast Going Out of Commission

A package of that chemical powder consigned for use against the natives of Ethiopia, must have gone astray. Instead of landing in Italian Somaliland to be scattered on the ground where the soldiers of the King of Kings were to trod, it reached Washington township. An epidemic of raw feet is raging in the district.

Indeed, after all, the world is small. The repercussion of the coming conflict has already occurred at this great distance.

And, as an afterthought, why didn't the Alameda county health center grab the package before it was blown to the four winds? In other words, why a trained nurse?

High School Rejects Health Nurse Services

The Alameda County Health Center offer of health nurse services for sixty-five cents per pupil—a decided increase over the amount paid last year—was declined by the board of trustees of the Washington Union High school Tuesday night, when that body met at their regular session.

The board concluded that the costs would not be justified by the services rendered, and have engaged the services of Dr. W. L. McWhirter, Centerville physician, who will make periodical calls at the school. Between the physician's calls, the teachers will note ailments, if any, and send the children to the doctor when he arrives. Serious conditions, requiring more than first aid or simple cures, will be refered to family physicians. Dr. G. S. Holeman will remain as physician for the athletic teams.

The cost of sixty-five cents per pupil, based on an average attendance of 500 at the school, would bring the health service costs too hgh, the board held. Plans to change the heating system at the school from oil to gas were abandoned by the board, when no clear estmate of the saving promised by the change could be worked out. The switch of fuels would have cost in the neighborhood of $1000, the board members said.

The board meeting followed a dinner in the school cafeteria, served by Mrs. Morris' homemaking classes, in honor of the new teachers and the wives of board members. The new instructors are: Margaret Fischer, Alvin Morse, Edward Morgensen and Dwight Thornburg.

JAMES FAIR, KIN OF SENATOR, IS TAKEN BY DEATH

Centerville Pioneer Dies Suddenly Tuesday; Came Here In 1890

Another of Centerville's colorful pioneers passed on Tuesday afternoon, when James Birney Fair 75, died suddenly at his home there. He had been a resident of the township for forty-six years, coming here from Iowa. He was a native of Ireland.

Fair came to this district in 1890, with his uncle, the late Senator James G. Fair, of Nevada, who controlled the old narrow gauge railroad between Oakland and San Jose. He settled first at Newark, later coming to Centerville, after his marriage to Abbie Crocke, who preceded him in death by many years.

Surviving relatives are: Mrs. L. S. Baxter, of Iowa; Edith and Margaret Fair, all his children, and Martha, John and William Fair, sister and brothers.

Funeral services will be held from the Chapel of Palms, Centerville this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. J. M. McElhinney, of Centerville, and Rev. E. E. Mathes, will officiate. Interment will be in the I. O. O. F. cemetery, at Irvington.

FORMER IRVINGTON MAN SLAIN AT SAN JOSE

Herman E. Walshe, 63, son of the late Dr. J. Walshe, of Irvington, was found slain in his barber shop at San Jose Thursday night, when police, responding to a call by neighbors, smashed in the door of his establishment. Walshe had not been seen for several days.

About $75 or $80 which Walshe carried when last seen was missing, and his pockets turned inside out. The possibility that the barber had been killed by enemies who had poisoned prize dogs on several occasions was being investigated by Sheriff George W. Lyle.

Walshe was last seen alive by his brother-in-law and half sister, Mr. and Mrs. George Mattos. He told them that he was planning to rent his San Jose shop and move to Irvington, where he would open a barber shop. He had planned to live in the old Walshe home.

Contents of Walshe's will revealed early this week, indicated that a cousin, Raymond Purviance, of Lincoln, Nebraska, would be chief benefactor. A bequest of $500 was made to Mrs. Bessie Olace, of Irvington. She had been a devoted friend of the slain man. In underlined words, the will stated that Walshe had no brothers or sisters, but that anyone successful in establishing such a relationship would be paid $5.00.

Private funeral services were held Monday from the Monahan parlors at San Jose, with interment in the family plot at the Odd Fellows' cemetery, Irvington.

Congregational Guild To Have Bridge-Whist

The Ladies' Guild, of the Niles Congregational church, will give a bridge-whist party in the church parlors on Monday evening, October 14, according to an announcement made Monday by Mrs. E. A. Ellsworth, president of the group.

The affair will begin at 8 o'clock. There will be excellent prizes, for winners at the card tables, and refreshments. Tickets are 40 cents, Mrs. Ellsworth said.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Theodore Gatlin decided to adopt a baby in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But all his love for their foster daughter could not shelter her childhood from the hatred of his wife, who had never wanted her. Their affairs ended in the divorce court but ten-year-old Penelope was given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin, except for two Sunday afternoons a month. On their first day together they set out joyfully to a baseball game. A ball, hit into the bleachers, struck Penelope on the nose and the neurotic Mrs. Gatlin removed her from the hospital to which her former husband had hurried her. Mrs. Gatlin spirited the child to Europe. Gatlin retired from business, willed Penelope all his money, and was about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ended his life.

CHAPTER II.—Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, a rising young psychiatrist, was presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl whose terrible childhood had left her with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" was in part responsible. McNamara did not think she was a responsible criminal and obtained Burt's expert testimony in court. Even Lanny, the doctor's faithful office nurse, was won over to her cause despite Nance's hard-boiled exterior.

CHAPTER III.—Nance's criminal record outweighed Doctor Burt's clear explanation of her case and she was sent to San Quentin penitentiary for two years. Lanny visited her and Nance persuaded her to smuggle out a letter, which a confederate stole from her handbag outside the prison walls.

CHAPTER IV.—Nance escaped, although shot, by swimming out to a speed-boat manned by friends and went to Lanny's apartment. Lanny told Chief McNamara, who ordered her to bring Nance to his apartment and phoned for Doctor Burt.

CHAPTER V.—One of the men in the boat on which Nance escaped—two of them ex-convicts, the other a bootlegger—had been wounded and they went to Burt's office, where McNamara found them. The bootlegger he let go and he took the others to his home, ordering the uninjured one to care for Nance and his pal. From them he learned that Nance's real name was Penelope Gatlin. Detective Sergeants Flynn and Angelloti, seeking the reward offered for Nance's apprehension, went to Lanny's apartment in search of Nance. Looking over her San Quentin cell, McNamara found a blank check on a San Jose bank.

CHAPTER VI.—From the San Jose banker McNamara learned that the girl he knew as Nance Belden was Penelope Gatlin, heiress to $750,000. The banker did not know Penelope's whereabouts. Mrs. Gatlin was now the wife of a man named Merton. McNamara ordered Detective Sergeants Flynn and Angelloti to "lay off" Lanny, whom they suspected of harboring Nance.

CHAPTER VII.—When Lanny got home one evening she found Nance sound asleep, curled up on her guest-room bed. Several days later the hardboiled exterior of Nance Belden suddenly vanished and the girl became the refined Penelope Gatlin. Her partially restored memory led her to tell Lanny of her wealthy father, Theodore Gatlin, and of her girlhood in France.

CHAPTER VIII.—Susan Engelbright, known as "Sapphire Susie," who had served a term for blackmail, appeared and asked McNamara's protection from Flynn. She admitted that Nance had gotten her three 12-carat sapphire rings out of hock after she had helped in her plans for escape. McNamara learned definitely that Nance (or probably Penelope) had sailed for France. He also discovered he was in love with Lanny, and learned that "Nance" was living in Paris as Penelope Gatlin. Doctor Burt had been treating Mrs. Rudolph Merton, and McNamara discovered that this woman was Penelope's foster-mother, remarried.

CHAPTER IX.—Stephen warned Penelope by cable to leave Paris, signing his message "Mac." When Flynn went to Doctor Burt to ask him to identify a passport photograph of Penelope Gatlin as Nance Belden, the doctor hypnotized him and impressed on his subconscious mind that he must never again mention the two names Nance Belden and Penelope Gatlin.

CHAPTER X.—Warned through the joint efforts of McNamara and Stephen, Nance fled Paris before Flynn could put the French police on her trail, and popped back into Lanny's home in San Francisco. Dan and Lanny were married and accompanied Penelope to New York, where Doctor Burt had engaged the best plastic surgeon in the country to remodel her nose. As McNamara had destroyed all her criminal records, this remaking of her looks would bury her identity as Nance Belden. Dan returned when his 60 days leave expired and reported the operation a success but that three months would elapse before Nance was out of the surgeon's hands. Stephen commissioned McNamara to look up the girl's ancestry and living conditions in childhood.

"And was it the best?"

"I do not know. It satisfied Mr. Gatlin."

"What has become of all the records pertaining to Penelope?"

"I burned them."

"Why?"

"To keep Penelope from getting them."

"Then she wanted them, did she not?"

"Yes, Doctor. She demanded them."

"When was this?"

"On her eighteenth birthday."

"How did it happen that she waited until her eighteenth birthday before demanding them?"

"Up until then she thought she was our own flesh and blood."

"Ah! Why did you burn these records rather than give them to Penelope?"

"I hate her."

"When you refused to give them to her, what happened?"

"She cried and laughed and screamed and attacked me. She said she hated me. Finally she fainted, and I had the maid put her to bed and lock her in her room."

"Did you give Penelope any information at all, at any time, regarding her parentage?"

There was a slight hesitation. "I lied to her. I wanted to hurt her because she wouldn't recognize my moral right to half of Theodore's estate. So I told her she had negro blood in her veins."

"What made you invent such a horrible tale?"

"Penelope is a decided brunette. I thought even if she did not believe me, my statement would create in her mind a doubt and a fear that would drive her crazy."

"What happened after that, Mrs. Merton?"

"In the morning she was gone."

"How did she go?"

"She made a rope of sheets and blankets."

"Have you seen her since?"

"No."

"Is she dead?"

"I do not know. I hope so."

Stephen turned to Dan. "Any questions?"

McNamara shook his head owlishly. "I can revive most of the record—perhaps all of it. The captain's record is in the army files; when he married, a notice of it appeared in the Army and Navy Journal; with that and what I can get out of the officers who soldiered with the captain, I'll get a pretty complete picture."

Stephen resumed his cross examination.

"Did you ever beat Penelope? Did you ever pinch her and slap her and lock her up?"

"Yes, Doctor."

"Wake up the fiend and send her home," McNamara roared.

"I will—as soon as I lock her up memory of Penelope," Stephen replied. He impressed upon her the fact that she was not ill at all. He commanded her very earnestly to forget that she had ever heard of him.

Then he awakened her, as McNamara departed, gave her a long look, felt her pulse, told her she was much improved and handed her some soda-mint tablets. She departed in a somewhat happier mood.

"Well," McNamara demanded, when he and Stephen found themselves alone again, "what do you think of that one for a hell-cat?"

"I do not think, Dan. We merely accept such people as we accept sunlight and rainfall."

"Do you think you'll see any more of this woman, Stephen?"

"I hope not. I hope the hypnotic suggestion I gave ner is strong enough to overcome her acquired instinct for illness."

"Were the things she told you illuminating?"

"Very. I suspected most of them and she confirmed my suspicions. We know now that Penelope is of sound ancestry. Her father was not a neurotic. If he hadn't been a normal, gallant fellow and physically fit, he would never have become a captain of cavalry. He was killed in action. But we have arrived at a starting point, Dan—the reason for the mental shock that gave Penelope a disassociated personality."

"For some reason best known to themselves, the Gatlins kept from Penelope the fact that she was not their own flesh and blood. However, while we have definitely established the date of the mental shock and the character of the shock, we have also established the causative factors leading up to the shock. Penelope had a most unhappy childhood. From earliest childhood she was the victim of bitter, rebellious thoughts. Then that baseball wrecked her nose. This was a mental and physical shock. The separation and divorce of the Gatlins was another terrible shock, because she lost Gatlin and there was nobody to protect her. And Gatlin's death was a severe shock. Then, as she emerged from childhood into maidenhood, the knowledge that her nose made her hideous naturally became an obsession with her.

"Now, Dan, by this time there was no further necessity for concealing the facts of the child's birth. Gatlin, dead, had left his entire estate in trust to Penelope, and on her eighteenth birthday she was free to do as she pleased. She could leave her hell-cat of an adopted mother now. She carried her own check book. The knowledge that she was not flesh and blood of the beloved Gatlin came as a terrible shock and with it, of course, came other terrifying speculations."

"More piling on of the inferiority complex," McNamara interrupted. "And she cracked under it. Then she made up her mind to forget Mrs. Gatlin—and she did."

"A clear case of auto-hypnosis, Dan. Now you've got to run down the record of our Penelope and that of her parents. She must have it and it must be proof of the most convincing character, because such proof is necessary if we are to restore to her her mental tranquility."

"Well," said Dan, "I'll be back presently with the girl's record, and then—"

"Out of the darkness into the sunlight, Mac."

"Well, the next one I find in the darkness will stay there," the chief growled.

The absence of the capable Lanny was a constant reminder to Dr. Stephen Burt of his sole experiment to date in a case of dual personality. He yearned with an alert scientific yearning to get to work on Penelope Gatlin, and when Dan McNamara appeared at the office one day he saw by the satisfied smirk on the McNamara countenance that all had gone well.

"Let me see the documents," Stephen demanded.

McNamara handed over the pile of papers.

"Well, you've done your full duty and have kept the police of various cities busy for a few days," said Stephen. "What do you hear from Lanny?"

"She'll be home next week. The skin graft on the girl's nose was a complete success."

"And how does the girl feel about the situation now?"

"She's crazy about her new nose and spends hours examining it in a hand mirror."

Stephen smiled. "Naturally, she would."

"Lanny says the girl's been her real self more than half the time since that first look."

"She would be. And now I'm going to add to her happiness by sending her this record, which I shall supplement with a report of my own on her case. She'll study it, and in this convincing proof that she is not what Mrs. Merton told her she was, she'll probably get well. These cases are simple, Dan. All you have to do is to discover the cause and remove it. Nature does the rest. She will have no more rebellious thoughts, because the despot can do her no further harm. Her black moods of depression will not come again; she is organically and mentally sound, the product of a sound ancestry on both sides of her family."

"But she knows she was an inmate of San Quentin. She'll remember she was a thief."

"She will, of course, feel great shame when fully restored to her normal personality. In her other personality, with her acquired instincts of morality and convention smothered in her subconscious mind, she had, of course, no sense of remorse or shame. I think that when I have explained this to her she will understand just what her mental condition was. And her fear that the world will discover her sorry record will, I feel certain, be alleviated by her knowledge that it would be impossible for anybody who knew her as saddle-nosed Nance Belden to recognize her as good-looking Penelope Gatlin."

"All I've got to say, young fella m'lad," the admiring McNamara declared, "is that you're one h—l of a smart man!"

Some two weeks later, Lanny walked in on Stephen. "Well," he declared acidly, "you've certainly taken your time about getting back on the job. You're looking mighty particular, Lanny. Happy?"

"Stevie, dear, I never knew there was such complete happiness in the world."

"Where's Penelope?"

"She's gone back to Paris—on a new passport."

"Well, well, well," Stephen chided her, "tell me things."

"Stevie, she's as lovely as a May morning."

"And the operation?"

"A phenomenal success. Of course," Lanny added, "she could never stand a sock on the nose."

"Just what is she going to do in Paris?"

"Close out her apartment and dismiss her servants."

"And coming back to San Francisco?"

Lanny nodded. "How do you stand Miss Ordway as your office nurse, Stephen?"

"Rather well, I'm sorry to say. She's very competent and much more tactful than you."

"And do you want me back, darling?" she queried.

"There you go, fishing for a compliment. Of course I do, but—it isn't necessary. You could come in once a week—"

"Not for a great many weeks, Stevie."

He glanced at her sharply. "How come, Lanny?"

Lanny's face was the color of old rose. "I'm going to have a baby," she whispered.

And then Stephen Burt stood up and took dear old Lanny in his strong young arms and hugged her. At last she was going to have her little slice of life!

"Of course," Lanny said presently, "you'll be the baby's god-father?"

He nodded. "Of course."

Three months passed—to Stephen Burt remarkable by reason of the fact that Mrs. Rudolph Merton did not call upon him. At last, to satisfy his curiosity, he telephoned Rudolph Merton to ask him how his wife was.

"Dead?"

"No such luck. She's gone to Southern California to join a new religious sect. A colony on the fringe of the San Bernardino desert with a prophet in command."

"And what are you doing about it, Mr. Merton?" Stephen asked.

"I'm subsidizing the prophet so he'll stay in business ten months longer. Mrs. Merton has deserted me, thank God, but she has to be away a year before I can secure a divorce on the grounds of desertion. The prophet comes high, but I can afford to pay for my fancies."

"Such sorrow as I feel now would be delirious delight compared with what I'd feel if she decided to come back to me."

"I congratulate you, Mr. Merton. Good-by and good luck to you. You deserve it."

As Stephen hung up the telephone receiver, chuckling, Miss Ordway brought in his mail. In it he found a registered parcel that had been through the custom house, with duty prepaid on it. It contained the finest and most expensive combination stop-watch and timepiece he had ever seen, and a note that read:

"Dear Doctor Burt:

"I know it would not be au fait for me to ask you for a bill for professional services, for I realize that what you did for me was done as one human being to another and quite without thought of financial remuneration. Moreover, I prefer to remain forever your debtor. You will never know what you have done for me. Christ, restoring life to the dead son of the widow of Nain, performed no greater miracle than did you in restoring life and happiness to my dead soul. I would try to thank you if words were not so pitifully inadequate to express the profundity of my gratitude. Will you not please accept the enclosed trifle as a token of that gratitude, and add one more debt to those already owed you by me?

"It is not easy to learn to live with my secret, now that I have found it out. I am trying to regard the past as one harks back in memory to a very serious illness. Some days, when I have achieved sufficient courage I am curious about my other self, evolved from darkness. There are blanks in my life. Perhaps you can fill them in. Perhaps you will not care to, knowing that they are better left blank. I do not think, however, that I was ever terribly wicked. If so, I have no recollection of it.

"Your grateful
"Penelope."

"Old Mother Nature is speaking to Penelope," he soliloquized, and replaced his father's old watch with the one Penelope had sent him. "Give Nature a chance—give her an even break—and she'll prove herself the greatest physician of all."

After some consideration he wrote the following to Penelope:

"Come home and let me iron out the few remaining wrinkles so your life will be as smooth as you could wish. The watch is wonderful. Thanks and I think you are very wonderful, too. Love as usual.

"Stephen."

It occurred to him to tuck that last phrase in for good measure. Love—not merely the love of a man for a woman but the love that is a fine friendship—was, he knew, very necessary to Penelope. She must, he knew, be assured that in all the world somebody really cared. Nobody knew better than he the wreckage that kindness and love denied can make of human lives; never a day passed without leaving him evidence of this.

He was not getting quite his little slice of life. Money, success, the joy of accomplishment, professional standing, the respect of his colleagues, he had, plus some good friends and true. But he was lonely.

He decided not to dine alone. It would be far better to drop in unannounced on Lanny and Dan, take pot luck for dinner.

CHAPTER XII

IT WAS late fall. Stephen had just returned from his vacation; it was his first day back at the office and he was a bit rebellious at the flood of patients that awaited him. He finally got rid of the last one at five-thirty, and following his custom, settled back for a pipeful of tobacco, when Miss Ordway entered.

"There's a young lady calling," she announced. "She says she is Miss Elliott."

"I don't know her, Miss Ordway. A prospective patient?"

"I imagine she is. I didn't ask."

"Tell her it's beyond office hours and suggest that she call during office hours tomorrow."

Miss Ordway departed to deliver the message, but returned presently to say that the young lady begged to be permitted to see him. "Very well, show her in," he acquiesced irritably, "but remember Professor Finnegan if she stays too long."

Miss Elliott entered. Stephen rose and waved her to a chair. Then: "Well, Miss Elliott, what seems to be the trouble?"

"Does my general appearance indicate to you, even remotely, that I am one who requires the services of a neurologist and psychiatrist?" she asked him.

Stephen smiled. "Scarcely. What is it, then? You want a subscription to something?"

"How astute you are, Doctor. I am soliciting subscriptions to a fund designed to furnish expert medical attention to a very deserving public servant. I refer to Detective Sergeant Patrick Joseph Flynn."

"I know him, Miss Elliott. What's wrong with Flynn?"

"His blood pressure seems to be very high—"

"Nothing doing, Miss Elliott," Stephen interrupted. "I admit I sold this terrible Flynn the notion that he had high blood pressure, but I did that for a reason I do not care to explain. The man has the arteries of a boy. What's Flynn to you? And just who might you be?"

"You have my name. What I want to know is this: Are you ashamed to take me out to dinner?"

"No, of course not." Stephen blinked.

"I appear eminently respectable?"

"Quite. In fact, a most presentable lady."

"Not so homely, eh?"

"On the contrary. But I shall not go to dinner with you."

"Why?"

"Well, while the experience might be delightful, I think you're too pert."

The lovely face drooped sorrowfully. "Oh, Stephen, would you be that mean to poor little Penelope?"

"Good god of love!" Stephen almost yelled. "Are you my little Penelope?"

"Of course I am. Oh, Stephen, you great booby, not to recognize me!"

He came from behind his desk, took her fiercely by the shoulders and gazed down at her, too amazed to speak. "That's a pretty good second-hand nose, isn't it?" Penelope queried, with just the suspicion of a quavor in her tone. "Don't tell me you disapprove. I adore it myself."

Very soberly he quoted:

"And you, my sweet Penelope, out there somewhere you wait for me,
With buds of roses in your hair, and kisses on your mouth."

"Oh, Stevie!" she whispered. "Take one."

He took three, and Penelope rested contentedly in his arms.

He hugged her fraternally. "My dear, dear girl," he declared, "if I were a praying man I'd get right down on my knees and send up a prayer of gratitude to Omnipotence. You're well?"

"Oh, yes, indeed I am," the girl cried with a catch in her voice, "I'm happy—not perfectly happy but—hug me! Oh, Stephen, Stephen, it was so hard not to come back when I received your cablegram, but I had to fight things out and I didn't want to come home until I could meet you bravely. Stephen, are you truly glad to see me again?"

"I am," he answered, and marveled that he should be so glad as he was. His heart, for some mad reason, was singing within him.

"With Buds of Roses in Your Hair, and Kisses on Your Mouth."

"Sit down," he commanded, and went back to his own chair. "I'm going to talk to you for five minutes, and then the subject will be taboo for ever. Imagine a long hill with a deep pond at the foot of it—a pond all scummy green and slimy—a miasmatic pond. Imagine that you started running down that hill in the dark, that you stubbed your toe and rolled the remainder of the way—into that pond. Well, that's exactly what happened to you. You were running in the dark and you stubbed your toe and landed in a social stratum equivalent to that scummy pond. Do you remember your foster-mother?"

"Faintly—as one remembers faces and events of one's childhood."

"Well, don't bother to remember her. Her cruelty almost ruined your life, but she is out of your life now, never to return. There are four human beings living who know that Penelope Gatlin and Nance Belden were one and the same. I wrote you a meticulous account of your illness, so you can understand all about that, but what I want you to know now is that no power on earth can ever discover you for the purpose of making you pay the penalty for the misdeeds of Nance Belden. By the way, where did you get that name?"

"I had forgotten who I was and I had to have a name. So I picked that one out of a book."

"The new nose has helped wonderfully, hasn't it?"

She nodded. "I do not want to hide from people now, Stephen."

"You must not. That would be depriving the people of the sight of something very sweet and wonderful."

The eager wistfulness in her fine eyes thrilled him. "Do you think I'm sweet and wonderful, Stephen? I want you to, most of all."

"My dear, come here," he commanded, "and sit on my knees just as you used to do when you were Nance Belden and a simple child of impulse—when you hadn't the least compunction about making love to me."

Penelope flushed, but nevertheless obeyed. Stephen drew her cheek down to his. "I want to tell you something," he murmured. "The first night I saw you, my heart went out to you. And when Dan told me how it all happened, I had a tremendous admiration for your courage and wit. I love brainy people, Penelope, and you have brains. I knew what was wrong with you and I felt so sorry for you, my poor dear! I wanted to help you more than I ever wanted to help any human being. I understand all about you; you were just a little lost atom crying so pitifully to be saved, to know love and protection and happiness, that you developed into a game, and Lanny and Dan and I just had to play it to the finish."

"Have you thought of me sometimes?"

"Oftener than I cared to admit to myself. Penelope, I know all about you. In this box on my desk are all the records. Look at them, Penelope dear."

"Then you bothered to find out everything—you cared for me just a little bit?"

"A considerable bit—just how much I didn't realize until now. I want you for my patient always, or as long as we both live."

"What do you mean, Stephen?"

"I'm clumsy, I dare say, but I have more than a suspicion that I've been in love with you—and now that I have you back I'm quite certain I love you enough to want you to marry me. I think my love for you will grow with the years that we are going to spend together."

"And you'll never think back—never be ashamed of me—never regret your course? And are you sure this isn't just pity?"

"Pity is akin to love. It started in pity, sweetheart—and it's growing every minute. Fast work, my Penelope, but I'm not afraid to trust my instinct. You're my woman. You love me a little, do you not?"

"Why," said Penelope soberly, "I've loved you from the day Dan brought me to this office. You were kind to me and you didn't seem to see my nose. I was so grateful—and ever since I've been waiting out there, somewhere." She hugged him fiercely. "Oh, Stevie, darling, all the rest of my life I shall devote to you. I'll not be oppressive with my love and I'll not be possessive, but I do want the task of adding to your happiness. I know what happiness is. I can appreciate even a little bit—and I'll never forget to cherish what you gave me and give back all I can."

"That way happiness lies. You seem to have the formula," he replied gravely.

The door from Miss Ordway's office opened and the nurse looked in.

"I'm sorry, Doctor Burt, but Professor Finnegan has just telephoned that you are fifteen minutes late to your engagement to meet the great German savant, Herr Doktor Uffitz."

"But I didn't press the button, Miss Ordway."

"I know you didn't Stevie, dear," Penelope spoke up, "but I did—accidentally."

Miss Ordway blushingly withdrew.

"Who is Professor Finnegan, darling?" Penelope wanted to know.

"Just a fictitious person Lanny and I invented to help rid me of nuts that stay too long, sweetheart. You don't have to consider him at all."

"I wouldn't, of course," said Penelope. "I'm queen here, am I not?"

[THE END.]

Colosseum on Appian Way

The Colosseum on the Appian Way, was built in 321 B. C. It was the queen of all ancient roads and early was threaded daily with traffic for all the known eastern world. Its sides were flanked with the tombs of the Scipios, Claudius Milo, Livy, Seneca and other illustrious Romans. Scipio Africanus in 201 B. C. entered Rome by this road. Cicero was welcomed here with honors on his return from exile in B. C. 57, the Apostle Paul entered Rome over its pavement and Titus after he had destroyed the city of Jerusalem was received with triumph along the Via Appia. This road was 350 miles long, marked with the earliest milestones.

Man's Size Changes

Some individuals are shorter in the evening because the little cartileges between the vertebrae of the spinal column diminish in size during the day, due to the weight or pressure that is upon them. In some individuals the difference in height between day and night may be as much as one-fourth to one-half an inch.

Hula Dance Ancient Ceremonial

The hula dance, sometimes wrongly called the "hula hula," was the ancient ceremonial and religious dance of Hawaiians. The dance presented legends and mythology of the islands and interpreted the lives and customs of the old Hawaiian monarchs.

Chicago Borrows Water

The water that Chicago uses in its homes, its hotels and in its industry is borrowed from the lake and transferred to the Gulf. Including the great use of water in industry, an average of 280 gallons is drawn for each of Chicago's 3,500,000 residents every day.

The John Newberry medal is to children's literature what the Pulitzer prize is to adult literature. It is awarded for the most distinguished juvenile book written by a citizen or resident of the United States and published during the preceding year.

Records Columbus' Birth Date

Calvi, Corsica, has for centuries maintained on one of its houses a tablet stating that Columbus was born there in 1441. Yet historians know that the date and place of the nativity of this great man never were revealed and recorded.—Collier's Weekly.

Power of Lithium Chloride

Lithium chloride looks and tastes like ordinary table salt. But to a far greater degree than table salt it has the power of drying air that is passed through it. For decades chemists have been using it in the laboratory to dry gases.

Women's Garters

Women's garters were common in the Twelfth century and mentioned by Wycliff as early as 1382. Before the discovery of elastic a strip of woolen material was often used as a garter.

English Authority To Visit Literature Class

In keeping with his policy of inviting one authority a month to addres his class in literature at the Washington High Night school, Wesley Dexter Gordon has been successful in getting Charlotte Wythe Rideout, of the San Jose State College English department, to speak on child literature and markets for children.

Mrs. Rideout's manuscript on children's books is in the hands of an eastern publisher. She is not merely a theorist, having four children of her own. The parents and teachers of the community will be delighted with this charming personality. The time: Wednesday evening, at 8 o'clock. The regular class procedure will precere the talk, from 7 to 8, Gordon said.

COMMISSIONERS NOMINATED FOR SEWER DISTRICT

Special Election To Be Held at Decoto On October 29

Committees from the Decoto Chamber of Commerce and the Decoto Junior Chamber of Commerce met early last week in a joint session to choose candidates for election to the board of commissioners of the Decoto sewer district. Frank Thomas, George Smith, Charles Brown, J. P. Calderia and William Hirsch were named. Miss Viola George was nominated as assessor.

The special election, a which the sanitary district will be voted upon by the residents of the community, will be held on October 29.

Peter Decoto, A. A. Amaral and Walter Walker represented the senior civic group at the joint meeting, while Phil Hernandez, J. P. Calderia and Frank Thomas attended for the Junior Chamber.

With ninety-five per cent of the property-holders having showed their approval by signing the petitions, the sponsors feel that the outcome of the election is assured as a success. The election will call for a $40,000 bond issue as the Decoto district's share of the proposed expenditure of $119,000. The PWA is to supply the balance of the funds.

COUPLE UNITED AT FORMAL CEREMONY IN SAN FRANCISCO

At a beautiful formal wedding, held at the St. Peter and Paul's church, in San Francisco Saturday night, Misses Virginia De Mattei, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James De Matei, of San Francisco, became the bride of Louis Di Guilio, well-known Niles man.

The Rev. Father L. De Mattei, of Los Angeles, uncle of the bride, officiated at the rites.

Garbed in a close-fitting gown of white velvet, with a long veil, the bride was in contrast with her attendants, two of whom were dressed in chartreuse velvet and one in peach. The bridesmaids were the Misses Angelina Del Carlo and May Cognosso, of San Francisco. Maid of honor was Miss Bena Davencenzi.

Di Guilio was attended by Orlan O. Bosley as best man. Caesar Di Guilio, brother of the groom, and Sam Kerns, both of Niles, were ushers.

Immediately following the ceremony the company went to the California Club, on Clay street, San Francisco, where a reception was held in honor of the couple. There were refreshments and dancing.

Later in the evening, while the guests were dancing, the newlyweds slipped away, with their honeymoon destination known only to their closest friends. Cards received by relatives this week disclosed that the couple is touring the southwest. They will make their home in Niles on their return.

Irvington Church Will Have Rally Day Rites

Parents of the Irvington Community church children are urged to attend the Rally Day exercises, to be held Sunday morning. There will be recitations by the children, music, and an appropriate sermon by the pastor.

Elmer Goold spent the week end in San Francisco.

WATCHMAN WOUNDS ALLEGED THIEF LAST WEEK

Complications, arising from a gunshot wound in the arm, delayed Salvadore Garcia's appearance before Judge J. A. Silva on a charge of petty theft last Friday. Garcia, allegedly fleeing the Holly Sugar plant with a stolen sack of sugar last week, was struck by a bullet fired by J. A. Bone, watchman.

Garcia, 23, was arrested last Wednesday, when his wounded arm drew suspicion of police. According to Bone, the shots were fired after the man had failed to heed repeated orders to halt.

Garcia, who was taken to the Alameda County Hospital under police guard, was slated for arraignment Friday, on the charge signed by A. K. Culver, of Alvarado. The court session was postponed when doctors advised against taking the injured man from the hospital. He will face the court here as soon as his wound permits.

GIRL VIOLINIST TO GIVE CONCERT ON OCTOBER 21st

A musical program of extreme interest to children of Washington township will be held at the Veterans's Memorial building, Niles, on October 21, according to E. Dixon Bristow, Niles school principal.

Jaqueline Duke, American girl violinist, has been engaged in her national tour, to give a concert here. The school official stated that the event may be the first of a series of such entertainments for the local children. The program is in keeping with the music appreciation, fostered in the schools, Bristow said.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Oliver and Mrs. Ida Easterday have returned from a vacation at Shasta Springs.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO "BREAK IN" THE FORD V·8

You can drive it 50 miles an hour the day you buy it

THE FORD V-8 is ready for normal driving when you buy it. There is no tedious period of breaking-in for 500 or 1000 miles. You can drive it up to 50 miles an hour the first day. And after the first hundred miles you can drive it as fast as you desire.

That means greater motoring enjoyment for every motorist. It is especially important to motorists who are thinking about a new car for a vacation trip — to physicians, salesmen and all those who use a car for business. Instead of dragging along at slow speeds for days, you can make good time from the start.

The reason for this is as important as the result. The Ford V-8 needs no breaking-in because of unusual accuracy in the manufacture of moving parts and the smoothness of bearing surfaces. Clearances are correct when you buy the car. It is not necessary to depend on a long wearing-in period to eliminate tightness and insure smooth running. Longer life, greater economy and better performance are bound to result from such precision methods. The Ford V-8 gives you fine-car construction, along with fine-car performance, comfort, safety and beauty.

Find Out

From Your Doctor if the "Pain" Remedy You Take Is Safe.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it — in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store — simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

JUNIOR PATROLMEN SEE GRID GAME AT STANFORD

The Centerville Grammar school Junior Traffic patrol traveled in autos to San Jose Saturday afternoon, September 28, to join the "knothole club." They boarded the train at San Jose for Palo Alto, where they enjoyed watching the football game between San Jose State and Stanford. They were accompanied by their school principal, Thomas Maloney.

The officers making the trip were: Kazuei Tate, Arthur Gomes, George Gomes, Tom McWhirter, George Emerson, Keichi Isoda, Joe Barrera, Philip Brazil, Takane Hayashi, Richard Marriott, 'Gene Bettencourt, John Soito, Norishege Oku, George Inouye and Tony Roca.

Centerville Woman Is Given $2000 Judgment

Mrs. M. Ponti, of Centerville, was awarded a judgment of $2000 in an Oakland court Monday, against Antone Viera, former Irvington baker, for defamation of character.

The suit arose when Viera is said to have made slanderous accusations against the Centerville woman, who is well-known and popular here.

TOMATO GROWERS HEAR DISCUSSION OF NEW RULINGS

Inspection Law Designed To Insure Consumers Excellent Produce

Rigid enforcement of new inspection rules, designed to increase consumption of tomatoes, is being carried on in this district as well as in other sections with varied reaction among the growers.

The new ruling was the major topic discussed at a meeting of the Washington-Eden Farm Center last week, with Alex Johnson, state secretary of the Farm Bureau; Milton P. Duffy, chief of the food and drug inspection of the department of public health, and G. E. May as speakers.

It was pointed out that the new law governing standards for canning tomatoes requires that the canners pay the cost of inspection necessary to bring the vegetable up to standards required by the department of public health. Growers have been informed that tomatoes will be rejected at the canneries, if more than ten per cent of the load is found to be damaged by worms or mould. The rejected load, however, may be regraded off the cannery property, and resubmitted for another inspection by the original inspector. Certain color requirements have been made, but bear less on the acceptance of the load.

According to Johnson, the new law was backed by the Farm Bureau, to bring about a greater consumption of tomatoes by the public, by insuring an excellent canned product. The law is being rigidly enforced, without partiality to any grower, Johnson said.

On the whole, growers find the ruling possible to follow, and are making a great effort to maintain the high quality of their produce. Some growers objected on grounds that the inspection was made in several cases by inexperienced men, who are unfamiliar with tomato culture, and who rejected excellent produce.

At the next meeting of the farm group, to be held on October 15, the annual election of officers will take place. Herbert Young, president, named the following as members of the nominating committee: Joe Williams, Decoto, and Manuel Olivia and Fred Lewis, of Centerville. Young and Paul Daugherty are the present officers.

A membership committee, consisting of Louis Amaral, Paul Daugherty, Tony Lewis, Frank Cardoza and Gunther Ripke was also named.

HISTORIAN TO TELL NEW FACTS ABOUT COLUMBUS

A unique program, featuring a fourreel motion picture depicting the life of Christopher Columbus from the years 1485 to 1492, will be given by the Centerville council, Knights of Columbus, next Thursday night. The occasion, which is slated for the Parish hall, will be in honor of the immortal explorer.

Main speaker for the evening will be William T. McSorly, of Oakland, one of the few prominent historians who are considered authorities on the life and explorations of Columbus. McSorley, in his latest research work, has unearthed a great deal of new information concerning the famous navigator, which he will present to his listeners next week.

Grand Knight Thomas Maloney states that there will be no charge for this evening of entertainment and all members of the council, their families and friends, and all others interested are cordially invited to attend.

Runaways Apprehended At Centerville Monday

Two girls, thirteen and eleven years old, were apprehended near Centerville by Constable Tom Silva Monday morning, when they were running away from a Mission San Jose institution. They stated that they were going to Oakland, where they expected to stay at the home of Mrs. Hill Hickock.

The two children, Marjory Stone, daughter of Mrs. Ethel Stone, 33 Georgia street, Vallejo, and Patricia Lindman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest W. Lindman, of Burlingame, said they had fled the institution at 7:30 Monday morning. They were seen by Fred Blacow, Centerville man, who reported to the constable. The runaways were taken back to Mission San Jose.

LIONS WILL MAKE COURTESY VISIT MONDAY NIGHT

Peceding the main address of the evening Tuesday night, the members of the Centerville Lions Club discussed their forthcoming "courtesy" visit to the Half Moon bay club, to take place Monday night.

The visit, in which the ladies will participate, is in return for courtesies shown the local organization at the time of the recent Township Fair. About forty members plan to attend.

Other business concerned the annual Lions dance to be held sometime within the next two months. Committeemen to work out arrangements for the affair are Harold De Leon, Chick Santos, Manuel Alameda, Manuel Vierra, Loren Marriott, Edward Luppe and A. N. Silva.

The main address of the evening was delivered by Lex Jensen, past president of the Berkeley club, and an authority on plans for universal registration by finger printing. He spoke on that subject, stating that the Lions Intenational had gone on record as in favor of the system. The local Lions plan to be registered in the manner described in the near future.

THREE ACT COMEDY GIVEN AT HOME LAST WEEK

One of the most impressive entertainments given for the benefit of the Masonic Home, at Decoto, in recent weeks, was put on by the dramatic division of the east by Pacific Gas and Electric Company last week. A three-act comedy, "The Devil's Scrap Book," was the feature of the evening, under the direction of Mae O'Keefe. I. W. Collins conducted the large orchestra.

The Diamond Lodge, Oakland, staged a minstrel show at the home recently, following it with a dance. Other entertainment included a program by the East Bay Conductresses Association, composed of Eastern Star officers. Kingsol Eastern Star Chapter, San Francisco, also gave a program at the home.

Communion services were conducted Friday at the home by the Rev. Attwood, of the Centerville Episcopal church.

Among items of interest at the home during the past week are the following:

Randolph V. Whiting, past grand master, called on Superintendent Hartman and Matron Richardson Sunday.

The board of trustees met at the home Thursday. Four members were present.

SANTA CLARA TO INVADE HUSKERS' TURF TOMORROW

Coach Regli Emphasizes Pass Offense For First Home Game

With the first taste of victory still fresh, the Centerville Huskers wound up a week's intensive preparation for the Santa Clara game, to be played on the local turf tomorrow afternoon. The opening gun is set for 3:30 p. m.

Coach Jess Regli, his smile a little wider after last week's win over Menlo, has been drilling his charges on passing this week, using Frank Maderios' accurate arm as the point of origin. His startling lineup was still undecided yesterday.

In the Menlo game last Friday, the Huskers climbed back to real form with a decisive 6-0 win. The Centerville lads piled up eleven first downs for a total of 194 yards. The score came in the third quarter, when Al Muniz skirted the end from punt formation. The flashy back covered thirty yards in the scoring play. He accounted for 121 of the Huskers' yards, averaging six yards for twenty times he carried the ball. Frank Mederios, fullback, showed up well in the second half.

Four linemen—Fields, Jorgensen, Houck and Juarez—warmed the cockles of Regli's heart by their savage play in the forward wall. Fields was particularly good, smashing through for tackle after tackle.

Regli urges community support of the Huskers eleven, particularly for the first home game, to be played here tomorrow.

OCTOBER 24 DATE FOR DISTRICT SCOUT RALLY

Date for the Washington township district Boy Scout rally has been definitely set for Thursday evening, October 24, according to Allen G. Norris, district chairman. Plans for the event, under direction of Aibert Lewis, commissioner, and Harold Benner, assistant commissioner, are being laid.

Promising numerous interesting events and contests, the scout officials have conceived the unique idea of awarding points to the troop having the largest number of people present from their town. There will be no admission charge, and all who wish to attend are urged to secure free passes from the scouts, in order that the number of people attending may be checked.

Exhibitions of scout work are being planned, to be part of the greatest event staged for the boys here in several years. Scout officials from the Oakland Area council will be on hand.

The scout fund drive, from October 28 to November 11, will be handled through the district committee, with G. S. Holeman as general chairman. The following troop treasurers will have charge of the drive in their respective towns: Frank Nunes, Niles; Peter Decoto, Decoto; Thomas Maloney, Centerville; Joseph Dias, Newark, and Carl Christensen, Irvington.

Norris stated that the budget for the several towns will be worked out in detail by next week. He points out that no concerted drive has been made so far in 1935, the only funds secured being those from a series of benefits.

Decoto and Newark are the only two districts that have filled their quota. The other troops have the following balances due for this year, which amounts will be added to the 1936 budget, to be raised this fall: Niles, $50; Centerville, $55; Irvington, $43.

Victory Circle Whist At Centerville Friday

The Parish hall, Centerville, will be the scene of the Victory Circle, U. A. O. D., whist party tomorrow night. Members of the committee, in whose hands preparations for the affair were successfully made, are: Adeline R. Santos, chairman; Mrs. M. J. Bernardo, Mrs. Mary Furtado, Mrs. Mae Rogers, Mrs. Jessie Francis, Mrs. Elsie Madruga, Miss Pauline Francis, Miss Alice Sims, Miss Mary Dias, Miss Helen Rogers and Lena Bettencourt.

O. E. S. OFFICIALS TO BE HOSTS NEXT WEDNESDAY

Invitations have been sent out to members of the Orient Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, for a matron's and patron's party, to be given Wednesday evening, October 9, at the Masonic hall, Centerville.

The affair, in the nature of a get-together before the members of the chapter depart for the southern convention is being arranged by Bernice Boyd, worthy matron. She and John Boyd, worthy patron, will be hosts.

Mrs. Genevieve Soares Fractures Hip In Fall

Mrs. Geneveive Soares, well-known Centerville woman, was taken to an Oakland hospital in the Botelho ambulance last Thursday, after she had suffered a broken hip in a fall at her home here.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Mary Silva, of Irvington, was rushed to an Oakland hospital, where she is under observation.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PARTY

October 11 is the date chosen by the Sunday school of the Holy Ghost church for a benefit whist party, to be held at the Parish hall. There will be refreshments for all, and prizes for the winners, according to parish members.

DRUIDS TO ELECT OFFICERS HERE MONDAY NIGHT

New officers for the Centerville grove of Druids will be elected Monday night, following their nomination several weeks ago. The nominees are: Morris Calderia, noble arch; Alan Walton, vice noble arch; J. D. Cryan, conductor; Joe Jason, inside guard; M. N. Silva, outside guard; A. E. Francis, trustee; George Holeman, grove doctor.

Joe Rose, present noble arch, will open the meeting, at which a number of coming events will be discussed. Foremost among these is the joint official visit, to be held at Centerville with the Pleasanton and Livermore groves early in November. Grand Noble Arch R. E. Galway, will meet with the assembled Druids. Following the official ceremonies, the group will adjourn to the El Lido cafe, where a banquet will be served.

Of further interest to the local Druids are preparations for a dance, to be given in November for the benefit of M. R. Silva, member. The dance committee consists of A. E. Francis, chairman; Joe Jason, A. E. Alameda, M. Oliveria, Alan Walton, J. S. Furtado and Joe Rose.

Echoes of Portugal Club Arranges Party

The Centerville Echoes of Portugal Club met last Wednesday for the regular session, at which an unusual entertainment was enjoyed and refreshments served. Alvin Goulart and Mrs. Z. Azevedo were guests.

Plans for a party, to be held at the Parish hall on October 19 were discussed.

Mission To Be Scene Of Rosarian Reunion Oct. 6-13

Special Sunday services at the St. Joseph's church in Mission San Jose will mark the start of a seven-day reunion of Rosarians. The week has been designated as "vocation week," with leaders calling the youth to the church in the county's oldest settlement. The Catholic Youth Organization will attend the 8:30 mass in a body Sunday morning.

On the final day, October 13, a social reunion will be held at the Dominican convent. Prizes have been donated for games by the Senior Rosarians. The junior group will have charge of the refreshments.

The annual C. Y. O. Hallowe'en dance will be held on October 26. Plans for the affair are progressing under chairmanship of Albert Silva.

Among those preparing for the week's reunion are: Eva Rogers, president of the Mission San Jose Rosarians; Mrs. Larry Mederios, head of the seniors; Eldora Perry, of Mission San Jose; Eleanor Goularte, of Warm Springs, and June Williams, of Irvington.

The groups are also planning a play, to be presented early in November.

CHILDREN ORDERED TO SCHOOL FROM HARVEST WORK

Attendance at several schools increased this week when Miss Louisiana Scott, county attendance officer, warned agricultural laborers that all children under the age of sixteen must be sent to regular classes.

Numerous children have been assisting their parents in the fields. Some of the under-age workers are members of local families, but the majority are of the itinerant fruit-worker class, brought to this district by their parents.

The ultimatum ordering the youthful workers to school, will further complicate the harvest labor problem, said by some growers to be acute in this district. There has been a shortage of field hands in all sections of the valley for the tomato harvest.

Workers sent out from relief headquarters have proved unsatisfactory in many cases, refusing to continue the picking with the excuse that "they couldn't make anything at it."

Vitiligo Disease

Vitiligo is a disease characterized by the disappearance of pigment from the skin. While comparatively rare in America and Europe, this disease is common in tropical countries. In most cases white patches are formed, around whose edges the pigment is darker. Gradually the spots coalesce and finally the white area may cover the whole body. Vitiligo is very resistant to treatment and frequently all treatments are unsatisfactory.

Smooth Air Work

By JACK MITCHELL

©. McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

"BASHFUL BEN" MAYFIELD determined for the hundredth time to tell Wilma that he loved her. Furthermore, with an increased salary cinched, he'd ask her to marry him. Bravely he stepped from the stag line, a tall bronzed figure quite handsome in a tuxedo. He tagged the beautiful blond Wilma.

"Wilma, I've something to tell you," he blurted.

"A confession, Don Juan?" Wilma asked.

"Bashful Ben's" heart sank and his confidence vanished. The same thing had happened many times before. "N—no," he stammered. "I want to tell you that I—I—have some more old clothes for the Junior League shop."

Wilma rested her head against his shoulder. He hoped she wasn't repressing a snicker. "Thanks, Ben. We need them. You'd be surprised at the people who are destitute."

Ben continued dancing without conversation but creditably.

* * * * * * * *

Next morning the factory superintendent greeted Ben as he entered the locker room at the field. "No planes to test today, Bashful. The old man wants you to go over to the school and check out a limited commercial candidate."

Ben's usually pleasant disposition seemed to vanish. "What's Malden getting by with?" he growled. "I'm supposed to be a test pilot, not a students' nursemaid." Beneath Ben's irritation lay a terrifying fear. Wilma was a limited candidate in the Arcway Flying school.

"The old man thought it would be a good idea for you to do a little instructing before you take over the Nolton branch. You might build up a school over there."

"Who's the student?" Ben tried to keep his voice firm.

"Some debutante. Maybe you know her, but remember, no favoritism," the factory superintendent warned.

"What plane?" Ben growled.

"Check plane two. The low wing."

In Ben's mind there formed a desperate plan. He had to incapacitate check plane two till Malden finished checking those transport candidates. Then he could get Malden to check Wilma. "Some cotton in the carburetor jets would keep the plane on the ground long enough," Ben decided.

He entered the hangar and approached check plane two. His heart did a power dive as he saw a mechanic bob up from the motor cowling. "Mornin', Mr. Mayfield. I had to come out early to check up on this timer. She was missin' a little when they brought her in yesterday. Everything will be O. K. by the time the students get here."

There was nothing to do except wait.

Finally Wilma drove up. He was right, he thought bitterly, watching her putting a gosport helmet over her golden hair. But he was puzzled by the gosport. He hadn't known that the school used them on advanced check hops.

Suddenly the full one way speaking tube possibilities of the gosport occurred to him.

While the mechanics were unchocking wheels, Ben, pitching his voice as low as he could, said through the tube: "Take off and climb to three thousand. Fly to Durberry, doing S-turns on the way. Bank 'em up steep. When you get to Durberry, land at the airport."

Wilma's take-off was good and her air work smoother than that of many veterans. After a few turns Ben shook the controls. Wilma released them. Ben wanted her to concentrate on what he was going to say.

This time he didn't disguise his voice. "Your work is very smooth. Smooth as you are, Wilma." There was no retort, of course. He gathered courage. "There's something I've been trying to tell you for a long time, but you always got me off on Junior Leagues or something. Now I'm going to tell you and you're not going to interrupt: I love you."

The world didn't fall apart, so Ben continued. "I'm going to be manager of the Nolton branch, and I want you to marry me. I promise to—"

Wilma shook the controls vigorously. The world was falling apart, after all. Ben's hand fell limply from the stick. Wilma couldn't talk back and she couldn't walk home, but she could land at any suburban field and call a taxi.

She might even report him for getting so fresh, thought Ben, as Wilma cut the gun and lost altitude rapidly in a spiral. She landed beautifully and taxied onto the apron in front of the hangar.

Ben removed the gosport mouthpiece with shaking hands. With great effort he steeled himself to resume the role of flight instructor. "That landing was all right, but this isn't Durberry," he said looking at a propeller tip.

"No, this is Lakeside," came the soft reply, "the elopement town where they marry people on a moment's notice. After waiting two years for this, you don't think I'm going to give you a chance to change your mind, do you?"

The Grunt

By BRUCE L. SCHMUNK

©. McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

JUSTIN wasn't the type one would encounter ordinarily in a line gang. In the first place appearance beguiled his age; secondly, he exhibited more grace of culture than accoutrements of physical prowess.

I looked at the fellow for a moment the morning that Mansel, the district superintendent, brought him to the service desk, and decided in the same moment that he would be a complete misfit.

Smiling at Mansel I asked, "Line gang?"

"Nothing else open?" he queried.

"Nothing," I replied.

"Then give him a chance there," he instructed me. "But," he hesitated to add, "work him into Squint's crew."

On the following morning without formality, Justin was installed in the line crew of Squint Makony. Squint was foreman, a powerful man physically, and a congenial one socially. To the "hot stuff" with which he had worked for twenty years he was a blood brother. Mike Rullo, the other veteran lineman of the gang, was a man in a very masculine sense.

Justin became, according to linemen's parlance, "the Grunt." He was to run errands, help load the truck, manipulate the ladders, handle the solder pot and bear the brunt of all jokes. It's a hard road from grunt to lineman.

One day soon after his inauguration, the Grunt was talking to Squint about the period of apprenticeship. He did not say that he would be willing to pay any price for a chance to climb, but such admission would have been superfluous; Squint knew it. Pete, overhearing the Grunt's remarks, seized the opportunity they afforded.

"You want to be a lineman, huh, boy?" he asked, binding sarcasm with inflection.

Justin colored. "I was talking to Squint, Pete," he answered.

Squint, one eye almost closed, turned to the junior lineman. The latter understood the tacit warning but he ventured one more thrust.

"Okeh, boss; but you ought to be orderin' a set o' rubber spurs for it. Them ones is made sharp."

The last consonant was still audible when a huge hand struck the side of the speaker's head. "You know it's time to lay off!" snapped Squint. "Now lay off!"

Although rain had fallen during the afternoon, there were no indications of an impending storm. The crews had gone off duty. Carter was at the service desk. He told me later he didn't realize there was a disturbance until one of the converters kicked over.

Within an hour four factories became paralyzed. Every minute cost the company money—penalty money. Squint's crew was the first called.

When I found them they were already at work on a pole about two hundred yards from the substation. The beam from the spot light on the truck enveloped Squint and Mike who were feverishly attempting temporary splices on the lower bank. Peter, carrying a searchlight, was walking the lines extending to the mills. The Grunt was making ready dry gloves for the men in the safety belts.

The mitts were half way to the top of the stick when it happened. A blinding flash of green light . . . a terrible hissing sound . . . a dull sickening thud as a limp body struck the mud—then silence. Mike sprawled in the muck; Squint hung motionless from his belt below the first cross-arm.

The Grunt looked at me and coughed. I tried to swallow to relieve the nausea. Pete, who had run to us, stood shaking, inarticulate.

While I bent over Mike, the Grunt removed spurs and safety belt. Pete, shaking violently, came nearer.

"Let's get him into the car," I said. Pete responded as well as he could; the Grunt had gone. We turned in time to see him buckle his safety belt around the slippery pole. Pete's teeth were chattering.

"Boss," Pete managed to stutter, "the Grunt ain't never shinned a pole. He'll get burnt, sure as—" The words died in a crash of thunder.

The kid on the pole swayed in the wind. We watched him dig in his spurs and then with difficulty tie a double hand line around Squint directly under his arms. Through a cross-arm brace he worked the rope, then called to the ground for action. A few inches at a time we let Squint down while the Grunt guided his head past bolt heads and projections. That sight I shall never forget. The Grunt fell the last ten feet.

Back in the substation hours later the crew foreman regained consciousness.

After the accident the complexion of the gang changed. Mansel transferred the Grunt to the main office. He is short two fingers crushed that night on the pole, but he is happy; Squint is on the job again. The man who thought of the rubber spurs is Grunt on one of the other crews now. Mike? Well, Mike hasn't been with the company since the night of the storm.

POLAND IS GROWING AGGRESSIVE NATION

Taking Its Place in Spotlight of World Affairs.

Washington. — Poland's strategic position between Soviet Russia and militant Germany brings this aggressive European nation more and more into the spotlight of world affairs.

"Twenty years ago the name of Poland could not have been found on any map of Europe," says the National Geographic society. "Today it is the sixth largest nation in Europe, with a steadily increasing population that will soon reach 40,000,000.

"Once before Poland was a great power. In the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries its territory extended from a point within fifty miles of Berlin to the meridian of the Sea of Azov, and from the Khanate of Crimea nearly to the Gulf of Finland. In those days Warsaw, next to Paris, was the most brilliant city in Europe.

Divided by Powers.

"Then came weak rulers and internal dissension that paved the way for Prussian, Russian, and Austrian expansion. In the three disastrous partitions of 1772, 1793, and 1795 these powers divided Poland between them, then legalized the proceedings by the congress of Vienna in 1815.

"The state had ceased to exist, but the people never lost their fierce nationalism. After a century and a half of oppression came the proud day in November, 1918, when Marshal Pilsudski returned to Warsaw to be acclaimed as chief of the new independent Polish state. The treaty of Versailles established the western boundaries of the new nation, and after a serious struggle with Russia, the eastern border was fixed by the Riga treaty of 1921.

"Under Pilsudski's leadership Poland has developed rapidly, despite tremendous handicaps. Long years of fighting had devastated the land. Russia, Prussia, and Austria each left the stamp of its domination, different systems of government, education, and law.

"The Versailles treaty left Poland surrounded by nations jealous of land that had once been theirs. Today peaceful relations have been established, particularly with Germany and Russia. It is significant that the last year these two nations, together with Great Britain, provided the best markets for Polish trade.

"Pilsudski remains the arbiter and hero of his country.

Economic Progress.

"Economic progress has kept step with political growth. Devastated areas have been reconstructed. From marshlands to mountains, agriculture has been brought back to pre-war levels. Factories idle or destroyed have been rehabilitated. The currency has been stabilized. Railway mileage has been increased, and a uniform gauge adopted so that rails bind Poland together instead of tearing it apart.

"The Pole, whose horsemanship is admired throughout the world, has taken to the air with dash and spirit. Captain Orlinski linked Warsaw with Tokyo. Colonel Rayski circled Europe in the air. Captain Skarzynski and Lieutenant Markiewicz made the tour of Africa in 1931. The Polish air line, Lot, covers the whole of eastern Europe from Tallinn to Salonika, and there is a regular internal service between Warsaw and all important cities. In 1934 direct service was opened between London and Warsaw and Warsaw and Moscow.

"A new railway from Upper Silesia along the Polish Corridor to the new Baltic port of Gdynia assures Poland's economic freedom. In less than a decade a dowdy fishing village was turned into a modern city whose harbor can accommodate 50 vessels at a time.

"More densely populated than Pennsylvania, Poland is still an agricultural nation; and the consequent elasticity of its labor supply, the economic independence of its peasants, and the modesty of their needs give it social stability in spite of the rapid growth of urban and industrial life.

"Monotony is the keynote of Polish geography. Rolling plains that connect the lowlands of Germany with the Russian plains form the main part of the country. Through the central portion flows the sluggish Vistula. Yet in the south there are idyllic mountain retreats of rare beauty. Through the unusual Krakow Protocol, Poland and Czechoslovakia agreed to turn the whole Tatry mountain region into one splendid international park—a buffer park instead of a buffer state."

"All the World May Stare"

By AMY CAMPBELL

©. McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

IT WAS the glamorous night of their rediscovery. They had been interrupted in the garden and so were dancing again, two people who invited adoring eyes for their youth and meantness for each other.

He was vowing that this time it must not be too beautiful to last with this woman who had been his wife.

He found himself mistaken in the thought that he had remembered how vivid, how utterly desirable she could be.

At this instant, in a way that had once been most marked between them, their thoughts met contrariwise.

"This time you must clip my wings," she said with veiled rapture.

He hesitated. It was still difficult to touch the past lightly.

"You said they were powerless before."

"I go over and over the things I said. How can you still care?"

"How could I not care? You are unconquerable in my heart." He appeared to be viewing mentally something lovely and quite apart from them both.

He was recalled by the bafflement in her eyes and remembered instantly how she used to say she never really knew what was back of his eyes when he looked away like that. Again there was her old demand in the glance she gave him.

He looked down at her in tender, anxious concern.

"Out in the garden you said . . ." she hesitated as if savoring something he might, under pressure, repeat.

There was a slight groping silence on his part.

"Say it again," she pleaded. This was very great condescension from her. His very amazement made him powerless now to break a silence so seemingly imposed by some cautious angel.

"Oh, now I know," she said, a gentleness breaking over the rebellion in her eyes as she looked up into his. "You always told in little continual ways. The big moments were very rare. Very waited for."

"Always wait, Tawny Lily," he begged, his voice rough with rushing tenderness. "So much can only be lived and looked."

People were watching them intently. It was the first time they had met since they parted. He saw that she was swiftly, cleverly, appraising what she read in eyes everywhere as they moved effortlessly through the crowds. Finally she said, "They think they are seeing an attempt to play with you again."

"'All the world may stare—'" he quoted with contagious sufficiency.

The misted meaning in her eyes made him forget to go on. Instantly, thrillingly, she took him off guard by continuing what he supposed she would have forgotten.

"'You and I are bound together so!'"

There was suddenly a look of appalled surrender in her eyes before incredibly, her precious, proud head bowed swiftly on his shoulder. He was unprepared for the tears crowding under her lashes, as he guarded this, his great moment of pride, and hers of such complete surrender, by guiding her toward the garden again.

Secure in the dimness blurred with white cherry blossoms, she said:

"I'll never do that again. I've shocked even myself. Now there will be nothing piquant about me for you ever any more."

"It's wonderful to have you say things you don't mean when you shouldn't mean them," he told her gravely.

"I had to tell you."

"And I had to know!" He was thinking that she had always really been for him. She confirmed this with her next words.

"Now I have clipped my own wings, and gladly, for you. Always I've been a little afraid of the restlessness in them anyway."

He drew a branch of white blossoms down around her shoulders and then startled with the effect, looked at her intently.

"There will always be a bough waiting for the sweetest wild wings in the world. Only remember your way home, my dear!"

"And you would star it with flowers for me! I can see that in your eyes. Even after saying I was already too tired and frail to be windblown or streamline. That I should be yours."

With one hand he held the blossoms closer about them and with the other drew a sprig across her eyes for a moment to veil the sweetness there while he made a secret petition that it might always stay.

"There was one white petal fell on your hair as you kissed me. It is still there," she told him with a queer little sort of reverence.

"They would all fall on you if you were to kiss me—again," he promised.

"Red hair needs exquisite care. Let's prolong the process by letting the years make it white."

"In just such a way?"

"In just such a way!"

Farmers to Plant More Than in 1934

Crop Acres Expected to Be Within 5 Per Cent of 1932 Harvest.

Prepared by Ohio State University Agricultural Extension Service. WNU Service.

Reports from 46,000 farmers in all parts of the country, reflecting the plans of all, indicate that they intend to plant 17 per cent more crop acres, exclusive of cotton acreage, than the greatly reduced acreage that was harvested last year.

Although indications, when the poll was taken, pointed to a larger harvest than last year's, the 1935 acreage is expected to be about 5 per cent less than the harvested acreage in 1932.

The reduction below the 1932 acreage level, according to Guy W. Miller of the department of rural economics, Ohio State university, is due to crop control programs, unfavorable seeding conditions in the drouth area, shortage and high cost of seed, and reduced requirements for feed following recent liquidation of live stock.

Corn producers intend to plant about 96,000,000 acres, slightly more than were planted last year but nearly 8,000,000 acres more than were harvested.

Spring wheat intentions point to an 18,000,000 acre crop. Last year not more than 9,000,000 acres of spring wheat were worth harvesting.

Farmers expect to plant 29 per cent more land to oats this year than were harvested a year ago.

Should present plans materialize, burley tobacco acreage will remain nearly the same as it was last year.

Little changes were reported in potato planting intentions. Planted acreage is expected to be less than 1 per cent under the harvested acreage of last year. Ohio growers plan an acreage cut of 3 per cent.

Increases are expected also in acreage of soy beans and barley. But hay plantings, owing to seed shortages, are expected to decline.

The number of horses in Great Britain has declined by more than 600,000 in the last ten years, according to a recent census made by the Army council.

NEW LEAGUE GETS APPROVAL OF CHAMBER

Voicing their satisfaction with the recent baseball season carried out by the Southern Alameda County League, the Niles Chamber of Commerce decided Monday to lend their support to a winter season, to be based on the same regulations.

H. L. Scott, league president, called attention to the success of the summer games, and stated that the rule restricting players to those resident in the township was largely responsible for the increased public interest in the games. He asked that the civic group, in offering another trophy, stipulate the same setup.

Guests at the meeting were A. J. Rathbone and Jess Regli, the latter being main speaker for the day. Regli, coach at the Washington Union High school, discussed what he termed "over-emphasis on football," and pointed out that betting on the major teams was a dubious pastime He exposed the futility of the "bleacher coaches" who condemn losing teams, and declared that sportsmanship was more desirable than victory, if a choice must be made. The coach told of his Washington High school team, pointing out its strong points and weaknesses. He explained that another championship would permanently give the Centerville school the league trophy. He asked support and interest of the community. H. L. Scott backed up his remarks with a plea for the local businessmen to attend the home games.

Earlier in the meeting, F. V. Jones, flag committee chairman, stated that there was not sufficient money in the flag fund to purchase a needed flag. Jones, R. B. Blacow and Lester Duffy were named as a committee to work out a means of financing the purchase.

W. B. Kirk will be three-minute speaker at next Monday's meeting.

Congregational Church News

"Is the Universe Friendly" will be the pastor's subject for Sunday morning. GLADYS ROSE AND COMPANIONS BACK FROM LONG TRIP

With more than 8000 miles behind them, Miss Gladys Rose, Mrs. William Helm and Miss Lilian McHoul arrived in Niles after an extended motor tour of the United States. The trio visited twenty-nine states on their trip, which took several weeks' times.

Miss Rose stated that they had originally planned to visit Florida after staying for a time in the vicinity of New York and Washington D. C. Tropical storms, however, lashing the southern state, caused them to change their plans. Other than several storms encountered in Texas, the trip was free from bad weather, the Niles girl said. Before returning up the coast, the party stopped over for a few days at the San Diego exposition.

TAKEN TO HOOSPITAL

R. H. Bennett, of Niles, was taken to a Berkeley hospital for examination Tuesday. He has been ill at his home here for several weeks.

TO BE HONORED

Mrs. Lewis Adams, of Irvington, returned to her home here late last week, after attending the annual boosters program for the state grange, held at Stockton. Mrs. Adams gave a series of readings at the meet. On October 8 she will go to a meeting of the grange at Modesto, where she will be given the fifth degree.

MORE ON County Taxes Upped

turn of property of the utilities to the local tax rolls, and by equalization, the assessed value of the county was increased by $52,149,662, but it appears that instead of paring county costs, and passing along the benefit of this widened tax base to the collective taxpayer, the county spenders—with incompetent children and ne'er-do-well relatives on the payroll—have increased their proposed expenditures by almost a half million dollars.

The little taxpayer, not understanding the methods whereby he is annually skinned, greets the 3-cent decrease in the rate with praise for the board of supervisors, not knowing that the decrease should have been many times more, and mostly unaware of the fact that expenditures have soared. Soared on a cushion of fifty-two million dollars of additional taxable property, returned to the tax rolls this year.

Hence the whole matter seems to boil down to the facts that county officials, with their tax pudding swelled by the extra utility sugar, and able to substantially increase their budget from that source, have granted the 3-cent reduction in the rate. The fact still remains that county costs for 1935-1936 have increased, and plenty.

"Many county budgets have been adopted this year without regard to the expenditure limitation law," the association's study concludes. "The indisputable fact that tax levies have been increased demonstrates the reason why the law was made part of the Riley-Stewart plan. Taxpayers may well consider the need for this law."
